the hands of Jesse Alderman, and when up to his waist in the water, Alderman fired the gun at him. Alderman, however, was not satisfied as to the death of Ed. Howard, and commanded Locklier to go into the creek and find him. Locklier went into the water, but failed to find Howard's body, thereupon Alderman being still unsatisfied went into the water himself, and finding the body raised it up with his left hand clutching the neck of the negro, and with his right hand, in which he held a pistol, fired a bullet into the head of the negro. The bullet entered near the left ear and came out near the base of the brain, on the lower right hand side, as the skull of Howard, which was exhibited at the trial, shows.

The men did not carry out their avowed intention, however, in regard to disposing of the person of Enoch Mobley, but he was sworn to secrecy and went back to Punta Gorda. A few days after the crime was committed Sheriff Dishong went to Punta Gorda, and Enoch Mobley made a full confession to him, and told where Howard was killed and how and by whom, and directed the sheriff to the spot, and after diving and searching Howard's remains were found.

Jesse Alderman and E. L. Locklier were immediately arrested, but Allen Lowe, who was implicated, has not yet been apprehended.

Several witnesses during the trial testified that Alderman had confessed to them, but this Alderman stoutly denied. Alderman appeared not unduly
